He enjoyed seeing people succeed in life and was always willing to lend his many years of experience to anyone willing to listen and learn. His giving heart was always evident in the blessings he received when he was able to give to his local churches and those closest to him. He was a man who wholeheartedly believed it is better to give than to receive.

Spending time in the outdoors was a favorite pastime of his. He enjoyed hunting, and he especially enjoyed being on the water, showing friends local sites and instilling the love of fishing in his grandchildren.
