“ Daryl and I were so very sorry and sad for the loss of our friend, Debbie. It was always fun to be with Debbie! She was a fun loving friend but could be serious as well. Each of us will miss you Debbie girl!
You were Loved by all!! 🙏💖😊🙏💖🙏

Deb was my one and only true friend for the past 50 years (approx), I live in Illinois and every time I past St Louis on my there tears fell at the thought of seeing each other together again. She knew me better than I knew myself.

After I had a few bad marriages, that I finally got it right with my present husband Ron. She also pointed out that her relationship with Keith lasted longer that all of her friends marriages.

When she lived near me we met working for the same doctor. We would go out after work to places that played music we could dance to. Most of the time we danced with each other. If a guy would try to pick one of us up she had no problem telling them to " fxxk off"

. At one time we hung out at the Red Garder bar" in old town Chicago. She did start dating a guy who played the banjo. After she ended it with him I dated him for a while. After I broke it off with him, we would sit on her couch sharing a bottle of wine picking the poor guy apart about how he used the same lines on both of us.

We once told each other that some day we would end up in the same nursing home, sitting on two rocking chairs side by side with our white hair in pony tails on top of our heads. Oh well, that isn't going to happen.

When we met we were both recovering from some of the trials that life gave us which cemented a life long bond that lasted forever. I love her and always will!.
