“ Dear Mrs.Allison, Jeff, Joel, and Jill: I am so sorry to hear about the passing of your husband/father. He truly was a caring man. Joel, I stopped by the other day and just missed you. I'm sorry I won't be able to make the service, as I'm attending the same wedding as Brad. (I'll never forget the day that Brad and I skipped school, and Mr. Allison called Shirley and then he called my MOM). But he was great! My condolences, Christie Noland Baldwin Jackson, MO

“ We are so sorry and extend our sincere sympathy to allof his family. After he retired from SEMO, we remember seeing and visiting w/him at Fountainbleau Lodge when he would tell stories to the residents, and at the gym. He was always cheerful and friendly. You are all in our hearts and prayers.

“ As an educator, I fully understand the duties and implications that accompany being a teacher. A principal, however, because of tasks that are more related to running the school as opposed to teaching in the classroom a principal does not have as much face time, the one to one time with students that makes the work truly gratifying. But the principal can still make a huge difference in the educational up-bringing of young minds; Dean Allison was one of those principals. I was on the staff of the school newspaper in the high school where Mr Allison roamed the halls establishing a proper balance of educational standards and making learning fun and I had the opportunity to interview him for an article about our lunches. Naturally, being a teenager (note all the implications...) I did not expect the attention and the concise and clarifying edification I was to experience that afternoon in his office. I was at the same time treated with respect, like any other professional might have been, and proffered a lesson about the economics of school lunches. And I have never forgotten that lesson. My sincerest condolences to those of you that are enduring this difficult time. Luke Cano
