“ Loren was a journalist in the public affairs office at Naval Air Reserve Jacksonville (Florida) when I came to serve there as public affairs officer. One of our first adventures was covering a disaster drill being conducted at Naval Station Mayport, just shortly after I arrived. He really showed me the ropes. It turned out to be an excited, but long day, and I ended up buying him lunch once I sensed that his energy was beginning to flag. I retired from the Navy in Jacksonville, and Loren transitioned to civilian life. My late wife, Utahna, and I continued to visit him while we still lived in Jacksonville. We were able to reconnect a few years back, and managed to have a couple of very lengthy phone conversations from time to time. We had a good synergy in that we were both good writers and artists, who challenged each other to constantly improve.
